

Peer Review Services

Peer review can be an essential component of the claims management process, serving both as a cost-containment measure and a quality assurance mechanism. Our peer review services involve the evaluation of relevant documents by board-certified, licensed, and credentialed physicians. This process provides an independent opinion on key aspects such as medical necessity, causality, relatedness, impairment, and disability status.

Peer review services may involve:

Medical Necessity Evaluation

Assessment of the medical necessity of the entire treatment plan ensures that the injured or ill individual has received appropriate care and may offer alternative treatment recommendations when medically indicated.

Causality Assessment

Examining the relationship between a claimed injury or illness and the associated factors determines whether there is a causal link. This assessment aids in establishing the validity and legitimacy of the claim and its impact on the injured or ill individual.

Radiology Review

Often useful in auto and liability claims, radiology reviews can provide clear and concise interpretations of imaging studies (including X-rays, MRIs, and CT scans), providing cost-effective insight into the individual's condition.

Impairment Rating Review

Evaluates the degree of impairment to the individual considering the physical or mental limitations caused by the injury or illness. This assessment helps in determining appropriate compensation.

Short- or Long-Term Disability Review

Determines if the individual meets the current definition of disability as evidenced in the available medical information.

Peer Review Services Offer

An impressive and extensive nationwide panel of board-certified medical professionals in all health specialties offers impartial opinions based on objective evaluations of medical records and films. Our medical professionals carefully review all records, films, and other materials provided to them and render thorough and well-reasoned opinions based on their review.

An objective assessment of the medical and disability aspects of a claim provide valuable insights into medical necessity, causality, relatedness, impairment, and disability. Engaging a credentialed medical expert can help resolve claims efficiently and effectively while ensuring fair outcomes for all parties involved.
